

USDA - Forest Service • Research and Development
Southern Research Station Headquarters
 Asheville, North Carolina

Southern Research Station Headquarters

of this you can use!

home	organization	the work we do	products & pubs	working with us	newsroom	search
----------------------	------------------------------	--------------------------------	-------------------------------------	---------------------------------	--------------------------	------------------------

Issue 11

Compass...our quarterly science magazine

Inside...The Science

American Chestnut and Beyond

The American Chestnut: A legacy to Come

Solutions From the Double Helix

Download issue 11 PDF

- Inside the Science
- Science You Can Use!
- Experimental Forests
- Products
- Contacts
- Archives
- Evaluate the Magazine
- Subscribe to email notification of this Magazine
- Subscribe to Hardcopy Magazine

Related Stories:

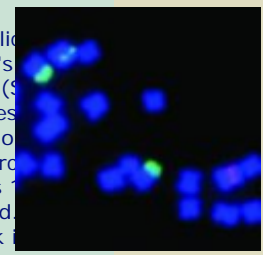

- The American Chestnut Foundation
- Mighty Giants
- Cherokee Uses of Chestnut
- Meadowview Research Farms
- The Way Forward is Back

Related Stories

- Why American Chestnut?

Publication Search

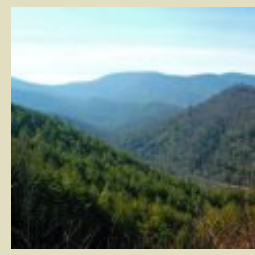

A Chromosomal Conundrum

Chestnut Cytogenetics: Faridi, Burnham, and McClintock

Where Great Forests Once Stood

Compass is a quarterly publication of the USDA Forest Service's Southern Research Station (SRS). As part of the Nation's largest forestry research organization, the USDA Forest Service Research and Development -- SRS serves the Southern States and beyond. The Station's 130 scientists work across more than 20 units located across the region at Federal laboratories, universities, and experimental forests.

Related Stories:

- Chestnut Blight
- The Promise of a Virus Blighted

Related Stories:

- A Prolific and Nutritious Nut
- Coweeta Hydrologic

- Laboratory
- The First Enemy of American Chestnut

Can Chestnuts Survive On Their Own?

Accessibility | Important Notices | Privacy Policy

Comments & Suggestions